His aunt's example, and her many maxims, and long lectures on the nobility of honest toil, never had any perceptible effect apon him.

"What are you going to do, Pop?" he asked as his co-sufferer, who viewed things pretty much as "Mars Andy" did, emerged from the house. "Goin' to dig taters."

Digging potatoes had always been hateful work in Andy's eyes before. But now it did not strike him so. 7 Anything was better than weeding. "Say, Pop, I'll dig the potatoes, if you'll weed some." Pop shook his head.

'Can't, Mars Andy," he answered. Ole Missus, she tole me I'd got to go and get dese yere taters my own self. an' not stop faolin' roun' wid nobody. She say she spee Mars Andy gwine to church. ax me to weed, an' so she tole me not to

This was delivered very glibly, for Pophated weeding as much as Andy did, and never found any difficulty in framing an excuse.

"O, pshaw," said Andy, who did not think of doubting Pap's veracity, knowing as he did his aint's opinion of his industry. "That's the way she always talks. She don't mean nothin'. Gim
